and to assign them permissions, they need to be assigned to the right user. in the first image i created a new role called "admin" and gave it the permissions of all the things. to apply the permissions use the console with your mod loaded. /give the role admin permissions will allow users to do anything when they login, including adding, editing, and removing a role that has permissions on the server. by opening up the console and inputting the following. /addrole admin role_name will add a new role to the server with the given name, and the /copyrole role_name role_name will copy a role over to the server and give the copied role the permissions of the original role. once the server has been created using new world and filled with dinos, it can be started using start_server. you will need to be root to do this. open up the console and use /start_server server_name and your server should be up and running. map formats are a bit more complicated than creating servers, but the end result is the same. you need to make sure you download a map of the size you wish to host, and then run the right tool on the maps file to convert it to a minecraft compatible map. most open source applications these days will have an option in the setup wizard to convert an existing file. many also offer a gui interface. for example, the map format is just a container, and you can have as many maps inside it as you like, so you can have a single 8 map map or a single 512 map. and they can all be loaded in the same world
